Mass:

Curator of Corcoran Art Gallery,
Washington, D. C.

Sir,

Please inform me if you have, in your valuable collection, a Portrait of Benj. Franklin painted by Robert Fulton. I have such a portrait, painted in 1787, which I suppose to be the only one in existence. A gentleman, looking at my portrait today, thinks he saw a Portrait of Franklin by Fulton in your collection, recently - Hence my inquiry.

Respectfully,
Henry Bayles.

The painting by
Mr. Inness is finished

The effect, I leave for you to determine its value.

In the adjacent studio the artists got word that the big picture had been completed and I allowed a few of them to view it - all feel that the work crowns Mr. Inness's artistic career. No member of the Press shall see the picture,
as we agreed, nor shall any public mention be made of it until I have some expression from you.

The frame is being overhauled, and a polished walnut box has been added for protection and finish.

When can some member of your
Board call here to see the picture?

Let me say to you that Mr.
Inness is rejoiced because of your readiness to have one of his pictures

Respectfully yours

Thomas B. Clarke.

Dear Sirs:

140

Last week Mr. Innes returned from his long pleasure trip
in the West and at once proceeded to finish the "Sunlit Forest".

Yesterday he signed the painting
which he believes to be his masterpiece. You will remember the beautiful tree trunks - there are grander than before, and after removing the figure of a man as was suggested, he opened up a passage
what seems to be brilliantly lighted clearing beyond the huge rock.

Proposal to alter the

Washington, D. C., June 9, 1891.

To the Trustees

Corcoran Gallery of Art,

Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

I have the honor to submit the following report upon the heating and ventilating apparatus in the Art Building.

I have made a careful inspection of the work and would recommend that the following changes be made in order to insure a satisfactory working apparatus.

First. Reline the furnaces and repair the brick-work to boilers.

Second. Fasten the steam gauges on the heating boilers.

Third. Connect to the system a return tank and pump for returning the condensation to boilers automatically; the boilers being set too near the level of the indirect radiators to insure a good circulation of dry steam.

Fourth. Place an automatic reducing valve on the main heating pipe so that the engine can be run from the heating boilers and carry at the same time low pressure steam on the heating system. This will dispense with the use of the small boiler except in extreme cold weather.

Washington, D. C., June 9, 1891.

To the Trustees

Corcoran Gallery of Art,

Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

I will furnish all material and perform all labor necessary for remodelling the heating and ventilating apparatus in the Art Building as recommended in my report of this date for the sum of One Thousand Seven Hundred Dollars ($1700.<sup>00</sup>).

Hoping this will meet with your favorable consideration

I remain,

Very respectfully,

C. H. Bradbury.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of May 4th addressed to my brother Julius has been forwarded to me by him.
 in this letter you refer to the rule of the Corcoran Gallery which requires a written agreement
 from the artist whenever a picture is purchased by the Gallery that the artist will not duplicate or repeat the work.

In compliance with your request

and in consideration of the sum of Eighteen Hundred Dollars paid to my brother Julius A. Truscell of Washington D. C. for my oil painting entitled "Going to Pasture" I hereby agree not to duplicate or repeat this work

Fifth. Lower and repack the thirteen stacks of indirect radiators and increase the size of the heating chambers.

Sixth. Build a brick air chamber for the fan.

Seventh. Enlarge the air ducts to about double their present capacity.

Eighth. Increase size of air pipes to the direct radiators and place a 4 1-2" x 6 1-2" floor register under each radiator

Ninth. Connect the exhaust from engine with the heating system so that the exhaust steam can be utilized in warming the building.

Tenth. Continue the present exhaust pipe from engine to top of the chimney and place a galvanized iron condenser on same to be used when the steam is not needed for heating purposes. The condenser to have a drip connection to sewer.

Eleventh. Provide a steam tube cleaner for the small boiler.

Twelfth. Pack all the valves and provide new automatic air valves for all the indirect radiators.

Thirteenth. Repack the steam chest on engine.

Respectfully submitted,
